III. High Schools, Trade Schools & Universities

Why introduce the practices of the International Peace Trees Program in high schools, trade schools, & universities?

The riches of the 5 practices of excellence included in the International Peace Trees Program makes real sense at the level of the universities and colleges.

At the cutting edge of research and innovation, the implementation of actions for the betterment of others and the planet in relation to the SDGs is favored and valued to solve the actual global problems of today, through applied science and collaboration between students.

These practices of excellence included in the 5 keys of reconnection of the International Peace Trees Program are transmitted by student associations, to allow students to:

1. Acquire best practices “for life” to manage their stress, emotions, and channel their energy towards the construction of their future, from the present moment to the quantum field of all possibilities.
2. Enrich the research and their end goals, by including the contribution that their discoveries and results make in the achievement of the 17 SDGs.
3. Come together to exchange, energize research, express, and valorize innovative solutions for the SDGs.
4. Create innovative partnerships between students, but also with local actors, and local and international companies engaged in innovation and supporting youth in the actions towards the SDGs.
5. Materialize and value their innovative ideas through the collective intelligence of intra- and interuniversity and high school cooperation.
6. Create an innovative dynamic between young academics, gathered for the construction of their future towards the achievement of the 17 SDGs, and connected by the Peace Trees, officially inaugurated in their universities or High Schools.
